"All that I can say now is that I am hopeful of obtaining results," Mr. Bendbeim said last night. "I will spend several days in investigating every phase of the situation."

The strikers regarded their position as considerably strengthened by three developments of the day. One was the reported action of 5,000 packing plant employees in striking in Philadelphia. Another was the action of the union locally in calling out the cattle feeders, who had been kept at work in order that the cattle might not starve. They were brought into the strikers' ranks, it was announced, because of the importation of strike breakers into the plants.

Conflicting reports as to operation of the strike-bound plants continued. One issued by the companies, that the plants "are operating closer to normal than at any time during the first week of the strike," was termed "pure propaganda" by the unions, which declared the plants were operating at less than 12 per cent of their capacity.

Mr. Brown played Wieniawski's "Souvenir de Moscou" and shorter pieces, including two of his own, with the familiar Rimsky-Korsakoff Hindoo chant and "Orientale" by Cui. He appeared as a skillful and accomplished violinist, if hardly great, but the generally light program was hardly adapted to display his full powers. Joseph Bonime was his accompanist, while Coenraad V. Bos played Mr. Schwarz's piano parts, both programs being liberally sprinkled with encores.
